

Mark's Trip to The Gambia – February 2016
2/18: - Visit to Kerewan

My mom has a project out in the back country which is why we went, and today was the day we start this project. It was a poultry farm for the school and village. A lot of the men came out to help with the garden which was very small but after they worked it grew very big. Projects like these are what give such a small village hope that someone can help them. My mom put the first foundation blocks for the farm, there were many speeches on how this needs to be a sustainable project. Sustainability is key everywhere there, no matter what you do, what you do to feed your family and yourself needs to be sustainable. If it isn't then the chances of it failing is very high.

Under construction: POULTRY FARM in Kerewan

The onion beds in the Kerewan Garden.
The produce from the garden and the chicken & eggs from the poultry farm will provide food and a source of funding for the nursery school.
